

Andrea Harris is the President and one of the co-founders of the North Carolina Institute of Minority Economic Development. As President, she directs the Institute staff in the development of project and programs that remain consistent with the organization's mission and purpose. Ms. Harris has considerable experience in community economic development, minority and small business development issues and extensive knowledge of both state and federal government operations and programs.

Ms. Harris is a graduate of Bennett College, and sits on numerous boards and commissions. Her strong commitment and work towards building the asset base within low-wealth sectors of the population of our state, has generated numerous awards and recognition for her efforts.